From here he was sent to Brunswick, N. J., and to Camp Pickett, Va., and then back to Camp Brunswick. After the President left, orders were given to start for the front. He was under the Command of Gen. Patton and Gen. Clark. His division followed the infantry and the artillery followed them. His Company had to search fields for land mines and remove them before the artillery passed over. His company also built a road thru the mountains in Africa. He fought thru French Morocco and Tunisia. When the City of Bizerte in Tunisia fell, his company was the first to enter that city. This ended the African campaign.

He then was sent with the invasion forces on Sicily and was with the first landing. In December 1943 he arrived in England. Here he was stationed until the French invasion began and was among those who gave their life for their country.

To Hold Meeting Monday Night To Discuss Problem

The Mokena School Board is facing a crisis in connection with the two year high school department and from present indications Mokena may lose its high school and if this does occur it will not be reopened again. The capacity of the school is also being taxed and additional room is also a vital problem.

The school board will hold a special meeting at the Mokena School Auditorium Monday night at eight o'clock to which the board invites the parents and prospective high school students to talk matters over and see what can be done to save the high school for Mokena.

The two year high school has done much for many students here, some of whom never would have had an opportunity to acquire a high school education.

Citizens of Mokena we must not let anything interfere which would in any way tend to curtail local educational facilities. Be sure to attend the meeting mentioned and learn about facts which now face the school board.

Guam, first American possession to fall to the Japs, is back under control of the military authorities. After the U. S. naval task forces subjected Jap installations to intermittent bombardment, the marines and army troops established beachheads. The Yanks drove northward and southward on the west coast, captured airports destroyed during the bombardment, killed hundreds of Japanese, destroyed tanks and installations and took possession of all major objectives.

NAZI PEACE FEELERS

Reports that the German generals revolted against Hitler only after peace negotiations with Russia failed, have caused Washington diplomatic sources to reveal that, on two previous occasions, German peace feelers were extended to Russia.

In fact, there was a very deep fear in U. S. army-navy circles that Russia might be tempted by these earlier offers, especially during the days when no second front had been started and when Stalin was bitter against the Allies for not starting it. Nazi peace offer number 1 was made several months after Stalingrad, during the early winter of 1943. The peace proposal was made by the Japanese ambassador in Moscow, who, being neutral, was in a position to lay the matter before Foreign Commissar Molotov. Just what was in the Nazi olive branch is not definitely known, though Hitler was reported ready to give back to the Russians all of their pre-1939 territory except the Ukraine.

Molotov is reported to have torn up the offer and thrown it into the waste-basket.

Nazi peace offer number 2 was made in the summer of 1943 in a villa on the outskirts of Stockholm. It was made by Hans Thomsen, German ambassador to Sweden and former charge d'affaires in Washington. Thomsen, who speaks perfect English, was born of a Norwegian father, and married a Hungarian who was openly bitter against Hitler and constantly damned him at Washington dinner parties. Washington hostesses never knew whether Frau Thomsen really hated Hitler or was putting on an act to show that there could be freedom of expression among Germans.

At any rate, Hitler later gave her husband a position of great trust as his own personal interpreter, then sent him to Sweden, where Thomsen handled the peace discussion with the Russians.

The Stockholm olive branch also was rebuffed by the Russians, though they didn't hesitate to let the Allies know that something like this was being talked about—even intimated that, if the second front wasn't opened before long, the next olive branch might be more acceptable.

Churchill never took any stock in these intimations, claimed the Russians were bluffing and would never make a separate peace with the Nazis. His thesis was that Stalin would be thrown out of Russia if he did. This was one reason why Churchill kept pulling back from starting a second front.

Roosevelt, however, felt that (1) it was only fair to the Russians to carry out what we had promised them and the world as early as 1942; that (2) a second front was the one way to keep Germany busy on two fronts and end the war in a hurry.

DESTRUCTION OF THE ROBOT

Authentic London reports are not too encouraging regarding destruction of the robot bomb. Greatest success has been in knocking it out in the air with fighter planes. However, it takes a robot just 3½ minutes to cross the channel, so the fighters have to work with terrific speed. (Total time from the bomb's launching until the time it hits London is estimated at 10 minutes.)

If they knock the bomb down over London, it explodes with just as much damage as if they had let it alone, so there is only one place to go after it—over the channel. Once a robot escapes the fighters and passes over London, anti-aircraft fire is stopped and the only thing to do is to let the bomb take its course and explode wherever it hits.

Furthermore, it is not easy to knock down a robot over the channel. Gunfire must strike its nose in order to explode it. A cannon ball in the body of the robot plane, however, will usually knock it out. Some intrepid fighters have flown up very close—the robot cannot fire back—and tipped up its wing with the wing of the fighter.

NOTE—The Germans recently have perfected a clock which goes off inside the robot about ten minutes after it leaves France, or about the time it is over London. This clock turns the robot's tail rudder so that it makes an eerie, graceful curve as if someone were inside piloting it, or as if it were radio-controlled. This sudden turn is calculated by the Germans to send it in a different direction from that in which the British are preparing to receive it.

ROBOT BOMBS IN LONDON

The uncensored diplomatic pouch from London reports that the proportion of Americans being killed by Hitler's robot bombs is greater than the proportion of British. This is because Americans in London haven't learned to adjust themselves to living in a city where death lurks at every corner.

Because Americans aren't trained in watching for means of protection in the street, they lose that split second's time necessary to get out of the way of flying glass and bricks.

THE PRIEST IN THE LIFE OF ISRAEL

LESSON TEXT—1 Samuel 2:27-30, 35; 4:12-18.

GOLDEN TEXT—For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God.—Hebrews 5:1.

Failure to observe God's law inevitably brings disaster. That is true in the family, and in the nation. It follows even though the man who sins is in a high and favored position in God's service.

Our lesson which brings before us the work of the priest in Israel also reminds us of the sacred relationship of father and son. These are important matters inviting our careful study.

I. A Holy Calling: (2:27, 28).

Eli was the high priest in Israel, an office ordained of God, and by Him established in the household of Aaron. The priest was to stand between God and man, there to seek His forgiveness for the sins of the people, and His grace and mercy upon them. He was to teach them the law of God and to seek for them divine guidance. He was subject to special laws, and had great privileges of service.

Such a man must not only be holy himself, but unusually diligent about properly rearing his sons who would follow him in this office, which was by God's ordinance an hereditary one. He had to be both a good minister and a good father. Eli was the former, but he failed as a father.

In the New Testament, Christ becomes our High Priest (Heb. 7:26; 9:11), and those who minister for Him are to bring men to Him—the "one Mediator between God and Man" (1 Tim. 2:5; Heb. 9:15). In this new covenant the minister has a high and holy calling, but it also is made clear that all believers have the liberty to come boldly to the throne of grace (Heb. 4:16); hence they too are called "a holy priesthood" (1 Pet. 2:5).

II. A High Responsibility (2:29, 30, 35).

As already suggested, Eli was evidently a man of personal piety and integrity in office. We honor him for that, but we regret his failure to properly rear his sons who were to succeed him.

It is not enough to meet one phase of our responsibility before God and then, because of our faithfulness there to seek to justify weakness elsewhere. One sometimes hears the expression, "But he is such a good man," as an excuse for failure, but it just will not do.

Eli did remonstrate with his boys, but he waited until it was too late—or did it in such a way and at such a time as to be ineffective. His failure at this point is declared (v. 29) to be a placing of his sons above God in his thinking.

What a solemn warning to indulgent parents! "Not to rule and restrain our children, to give them their own way, is to honor them more than God. Ere we think it, weakness becomes wickedness in ourselves and in our children too." God has "made every parent . . . a king in his home, that he may . . . command his children in the way of the Lord" (Andrew Murray).

God will not permit such sin and failure to pass unnoticed. He will set aside those who fail Him (v. 30) and bring them into judgment. He has others who are willing to serve Him (v. 35). Evidently young Samuel was the one in mind here.

It is both significant and encouraging to note that in the midst of the wicked and immoral surroundings created by Eli's sons, God had the tender vine of His own planting—the life of the boy Samuel, growing up in the temple. He was already hearing God's voice and learning to obey the call.

III. A Heavy Judgment (4:12-18).

The Israelites went out to battle against the Philistines. Meeting defeat, they thought to gain victory by bringing the ark of the covenant into battle, and who had the effrontery to appear as "priests" with the ark but the wicked sons of Eli.

Swift and awful was the judgment of God. Not only was there defeat, but the ark was lost to the heathen Philistines, and the two sons of Eli were killed. When Eli heard the news of what had taken place, he too fell and died. Here was the tragic end of a life that had begun with promise, and all because of weakness, failure and sin.

There is a pointed lesson here for us. The people of Israel depended on the ark itself, an outward symbol of godliness, when there was no spiritual life in the heart—and they went down to failure. Will we go through the motions of religious exercises, talk easily of prayer, appoint men who please our itching ears (II Tim. 4:3) to preach to us, and then go on our careless, worldly, indifferent way, supposing that our formal religion will save us? Paul tells us in II Timothy 3:1-5 that "having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof" is a sign of the "last days," of "perilous times" which have come upon us. May God save us!

MR. WINKLE GOES TO WAR

By THEODORE PRATT

W.N.U. RELEASE

THE STORY THUS FAR: Forty-four-year-old Wilbert Winkle, who owns a modest general repair shop in the alley back of his home, is notified by his draft board that he is in I-A. He is very much surprised, as he had thought that his many physical handicaps would keep him out. He breaks the bad news to his wife, Amy, who has always dominated him, and goes to work without kissing her goodbye. His picture appears in the paper next day under the headline, "Winkle Proud to Fight." The Pettigrews and other neighbors pay a call in the evening, and shake their heads solemnly. Next day Winkle tacks a "Closed" sign over his place of business and his wife packs his things.

CHAPTER IV

"They will," said Mrs. Winkle, "when they find out how you catch cold right away if you get your feet wet."

Mr. Winkle didn't argue about it, but let her have her way. After all, he was leaving tomorrow, and she would be alone except for Penelope.

He seated himself in an armchair, and Mrs. Winkle came to stand before him. There was a peculiar look on her face. "Wilbert," she whispered.

He glanced up. He didn't understand at first what she wanted, but was prepared for it when he did. By this time he was getting accustomed to almost any surprise.

Shyly, she slipped on to his lap, and sat there. It was a long time since she had done this, and she had put on her plumpness since the last time. Mr. Winkle found her somewhat heavy, but not disagreeably so.

Mrs. Winkle fussed and fretted over him.

She rested her head on his shoulder, snuggling her face against his neck, and he put one of his arms around her waist. Penelope gazed at them curiously, as if she found the scene not quite proper.

"I didn't mean to say anything about this," she told him, "and I'm thinking of you as much as myself when I do. I've been worrying," she confessed, "about trouble you might get into."

"Trouble?" asked Mr. Winkle. "What kind of trouble?"

"Well," she said, "this is the first time we've ever been separated. Do you realize that?"

Mr. Winkle was bewildered. "I don't see what—"

"I mean," she explained, "that you could be tired of me. I mean—other women." She came out with it in a rush. "You read about it every day. You might—you might—"

Mr. Winkle was startled. He hastened to assure Amy that there was nothing for her to worry about on that score. He told her he wasn't tired of her and that he wasn't interested in any other woman.

She sat bolt upright on his lap. "But you don't know," she stated. "You don't know yourself. You don't know how it will be."

"How," inquired Mr. Winkle, "will it be?" He was suddenly pleased to find her jealous.

"When you've been away from me long enough," she elucidated, "you'll find out."

Mr. Winkle contemplated that. At the prospect of there being something to what she said, he thought he had better deny it with convincing spirit. "Now you look here," he said, "when you catch me with another woman, you take it up then."

"But I won't be there to catch you!" she protested. "I won't know a thing about it. Except," she reflected, "I'll be able to tell when I see you again."

Threatened with this test, Mr. Winkle accused, "All you're doing is putting ideas in my head."

She drew back. "Why, Wilbert Winkle!" she cried angrily, and again there peeped forth the Amy of recent years. "Do you know what you're doing? You're placing the blame on me for your being unfaithful!"

Mr. Winkle felt that, having been given his trousers back, he should retain them. It was no time to quibble about that or shirk it. "You wait till I am," he retorted testily. "I'll send you a postcard. And on it," he said darkly, "I'll also ask why everything you're saying doesn't work on your side of the fence, too."

Instead of the frown between her eyes returning, and the pressing together of her lips, as Mr. Winkle half expected, Amy's blue eyes simply went wide.

Mrs. Winkle's eyes filled with tears and she flung herself at Mr. Winkle, wailing, "Oh, Wilbert, you're going to war and you'll come back without a leg or an arm or—or . . . and I haven't been nice to you for a long time, not nice at all . . . and oh, Wilbert, Wilbert!"

She sobbed, letting out all the shame that had been hers since the morning his notice arrived, and all the fear that she, too, had kept hidden during the last days.

Now it was Mr. Winkle who held her, and patted her, and assured her.

This made him feel strong and manly, and almost good about going to war.

In the morning, before they drove downtown, taking Penelope with them because they felt she, too, should see him off, Mrs. Winkle fussed and fretted over him.

"You've got your pills?" she asked. "The big bottle we had made up for you?"

Mr. Winkle patted his pocket and the pills, in their bottle, rattled.

"You haven't taken out your rubbers again?"

Mr. Winkle shook his head.

Mrs. Winkle contemplated, her brow furrowed for a moment, but she could think of nothing else. "I still can't believe you're really going," she said.

"Maybe I'll be back tomorrow."

"Oh, Wilbert, I know it isn't the thing to say, but I hope you will be." Anxiously, she asked, "If you aren't, are you sure you're going to be all right?"

"I don't see why not," he answered stoutly.

Now that the moment of leaving was here, all he could think was: Will I ever return? Will I ever see Maple Avenue and home again?

As he drove away he looked back, to catch a last glimpse of the house. Still craning his neck when he reached the corner, he nearly collided with a truck which wasn't saving its tires, eliciting a shriek from Mrs. Winkle and a protesting yelp from Penelope.

In front of the post office he got out and Mrs. Winkle took over the wheel. She would meet him with his bag at the bus station, to which Mr. Winkle understood he was to march in a parade.

Mr. Winkle negotiated the stairs to the second floor of the post office feeling a little as if he were mounting a scaffold to his doom. When he walked down the hall and into the draft board's room he found that most of the other men were already there.

Three members of the board, including the clerk and the chairman, who was clad in a blue American Legion uniform and made a very official appearance, sat before a table at the front of the room. They shuffled papers with a grave air.

The draftees themselves sat on collapsible chairs and with uneasy expressions alternated between regarding each other and the men at the table.

Mr. Winkle took a seat in the rear row. Some of the men, he saw, recognized him from his picture in the paper. A few of them gave him brief smiles or nods, tentative invitations to being comrades in arms. Or recognition that he was in the same boat with them. Mr. Winkle couldn't decide which it was.

More men came in and seated themselves. Jack Pettigrew arrived and sat gingerly on the edge of a chair; he didn't look around. Mr. Winkle counted, to keep his mind busy, and saw that seventeen were present. All were here except one. Most of them were very young, not much more than half his age.

All heads turned as the last of the draftees appeared.

Mr. Winkle knew Freddie Tindall from having seen him decorating the main street of the town. He was a fixture there, like one of the lamp posts or a traffic sign. He was twenty-eight, handsome, with a thin dark mustache plastered across his lip, and his clothes were too flashy.

Freddie was a prominent member of the depression generation. He had come to maturity when there were no jobs to be had. Once having formed the habit of not working, he made it a career at which he excelled. It was his boast that he had never earned a nickel in his life and never would as long as his family's money held out. Now the war had come along to interfere with the signal success he was making of his ambition.

Freddie eyed the gathering with a superior air. When he agreed to come in and join the group, his eye lighted on Mr. Winkle. He slammed his suitcase on the floor, eased his frame gracefully to a chair in the rear row and greeted Mr. Winkle, "Hello, Pop."

One man tittered nervously. A few smiled without conviction. Jack

Pettigrew, who just then looked around, stared. The others paid no attention.

Mr. Winkle was indignant. It had been bad enough to have certain people laugh at him. But he hadn't expected one of his fellow draftees to make fun of him.

He decided that Freddie Tindall didn't know any better and wasn't worth bothering about. But Freddie was the instrument of something else that really touched him. For the first time Mr. Winkle told himself that he wasn't old. The others were just young.

The chairman of the draft board looked at his watch and then rose. He made a little talk, while the men all listened attentively, except for Freddie Tindall, who gazed indolently out the window.

The chairman explained that they had all been chosen fairly, strictly according to the Selective Service regulations. They were being asked to do a serious thing at a serious time. He knew each would do it to the best of his ability. He wished them good luck. He said that the roll would now be called. Each man, at his name, was to come forward and receive his papers and a small going-away kit furnished by the Women Volunteers.

"A leader," he concluded, "is being appointed for you, and you are required to obey him on the way to your Induction Center. The senior member among you, Mr. Wilbert Winkle, will be your leader."

Mr. Winkle was flattered. He was glad for the responsibility. It would help take his mind off himself.

Freddie Tindall leaned toward him and inquired, "How do you like being a big shot, Pop?"

Mr. Winkle saw that he was going to have trouble with Freddie.

The men began to go up. Mr. Winkle's was the last name called. He received his kit, contained in a brown imitation leather packet. Each of the draft board members shook his hand. He was given his own papers, and then instructions about a number of other documents for the group. The clerk was reading one of these, his warrant of authority, when the American Legion band burst into sound outside on the street. The clerk had to raise his voice to make the rest of the warrant heard.

They all trooped down to the street. Quite a crowd had gathered. The band, which had completed its first rendition, took up another at the sight of the group of draftees. There was a scattering of applause from the crowd. Mr. Winkle saw that some of the people had little American flags, which they waved.

Those who carried suitcases piled them in the cars of the draft board members. Then the chairman lined up the selectees in a ragged formation, four abreast, in back of the band. Mr. Winkle was placed at their head, out in front all by himself. He didn't care for this distinction, but he couldn't refuse it. The attention thus drawn to him, and the noise and the staring, cheering people, bewildered him.

They marched off behind the blaring band, and Mr. Winkle couldn't get over how the music sent a chill up his spine, stirring him. It hadn't been so long ago that he was firmly convinced martial music was an evil thing, spurring people to war.

Part of the crowd walked along with the procession, keeping pace with it. The sporadic cheering and handclapping kept up as more people were passed along the route. The parade went right through a red traffic light.

Mr. Winkle marched stiffly. He tried to keep in time with the music, but found it difficult, and finally gave it up. He wondered what the other men were doing, but didn't look back to see. Once someone in the crowd on the sidewalk called out: "Hi, Winkle! Grind their Axis for them!"

Clear Low-Hanging Fog Over Airport by Spraying

It is possible to clear low-hanging fog from airports through the use of a calcium chloride spray which absorbs moisture. Tunnels have been made through the fog 2,000 feet long, 150 feet wide and 100 feet high—large enough for bomber and transport planes to land.

Difficulty: Cost of application too high. Fog cannot be cleared when high wind prevails.

Dear Mrs. Kruspe:

Just a few lines to let all know that I'm really getting around. Have spent fifteen months in Ireland and eight months in England and have spent some time already in France. Tho really enjoyed myself in Brighton, England where the people really give the U. S. boys a great welcome. The girls there were sweet kids and always glad to show one around the town. We boys really appreciated their kindness to the fullest degree.

I'm feeling fine and hope all is well back in Orland Park. Receive the Orland Park Herald regularly, but its quite old when I do receive it. Must close now as I am not on a furlough.

Sincerely yours,
Cpl. Emil Meir.

Dear Mrs. Kruspe:

Just a few lines, I thought I'd let you know I'm now in Italy. Sure is a impoverished country, children begging and pick pocketing. They sure must have endured some hardships according to their stories. A person could hardly believe that the enemy could cut off the childrens hands for begging.

Meat and foods are scarce, meat costs $3.50 per lb. Clothing is scarce and very high. My mail is catching up with me, but so far haven't as yet received the Orland Herald. I imagine quite a few of my old pals are located somewhere hereabouts.

I understand Owen Creer is somewhere in Italy. The scenery in Italy is very beautiful, but imagine it was far more so before being invaded.

Will be glad to hear from some Orland Parkers. Must close as can't get much on this V-mail.

As ever,
Harold Helenhouse

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"Good morning, Doc. Your good wife tells me you're working night and day now that so many of the younger doctors are in the army."

"That's right, Judge, and I'm glad I'm still able to do it. Had a long letter from Harry... that bright young fellow I was breakin' in to take over my practice. He said the boys in the service are getting the best medical care of any armed force in our history. They really should with all those brilliant doctors and plenty of supplies to work with."

"Speaking of supplies, Doc, not many people realize that a large part of the alcohol required to make the medical supplies that are being used right this minute to alleviate pain, combat infection and save human lives, is produced by the beverage distilling industry. For nearly two years this entire industry has been working night and day producing nothing but alcohol for the government's program."

"Nobody knows better than I, Judge, what an important contribution to our war effort that has been."

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our darling daughter and sister Mary Annette Cooper, who left us one year ago today, August 12, 1943. This lovely bud, so young, so fair; Called hence by early doom, Just came to show how sweet a flower.

In Paradise would bloom. Ere sin could harm or sorrow fade, Death came with friendly care; The opening bud to Heaven conveyed, And bade it blossom there.

HER BEREAVED MOTHER AND DADDY, HER BROTHER LOUIS

Intelligent Action At Last

When the government started its program of building giant dams thru out the United States for the purpose of flood control, irrigation, navigation, etc., the public was given to understand that electric power development would be a by product, and largely sold to existing private electric transmission systems for distribution to consumers at equitable rates to be established by the government.

Actually, Federal power agencies followed an opposite policy. The dams have been used primarily for power purposes to compete with private enterprise, thus destroying taxable assets, while themselves remaining tax exempt.

The result has been hundreds of millions of dollars of unnecessary public expenditures loaded onto the backs of already groaning taxpayers.

In California, however, an example of how Federal dams can be operated according to the original program, has been witnessed. Under a contract with the Federal Bureau of Reclamation, power from the great Shasta dam, which will in fact provide irrigation water to many California farms, is being sold to the Pacific Gas & Electric company which serves Northern California. Beginning January 1, 1945 the company will pay the government a minimum of $2,700,000 a year for the output of the dam, and payments may exceed $3,000,000 a year, millions which the government may apply to operating costs and to reducing the cost of water to the farmers of the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys.

How much better is such a policy than for Federal agencies to start duplicating the distribution facilities of private power companies, thereby destroying taxpaying business.

This constructive policy should be adopted in other areas where tax-exempt Federal dams are being used for political purposes to cripple or destroy private power companies in furtherance of an out and out program to socialize the electric industry.

August 2

Hello Dolores:
If my memory serves me right, its over a year since I wrote my last letter to you. As I remember, that was while I was in Port-of-Spain, Trinidad. As you can guess,

I've been around plenty since then. Naturally, censorship regulations, make it impossible to tell you exactly what we did, where, and at what specific time. However, here's some news for you, which I believe will be permissible:

We've had a full year of almost constant contact with the Japs, and, of course, we managed to beat hell out of them regularly. We've had our share of laughs, excitement and all the miseries that go with battle at sea. We've visited far-off places, and strictly between us two, a lot of the south sea Islands are a big pain in the neck! On the other hand, I love the tropics. Perhaps that's because I always did love hot weather. There were more or less days in a week than seven? I'll say there are! It gave me many headaches, each time we crossed the International Date Line we added, or lost, a day depending on our direction of travel. It's funny to climb into your sack on Friday nite and waking up Sunday morning. Or again, go to sleep on Monday nite and wake up Monday morning!

All of that is in the past now. I've been transferred to duty here in Hawaii, with a Naval Air Transport Squadron. I like my job as its almost the same as I did in civilian life. I find that Hawaii is a wonderful place. And there's plenty to see. I like the mountains and small villages a lot more than I care for downtown Honolulu. If it was possible for me to have my movie camera I could get many reels of beautiful sights that I could some day relive this part of my globe-trotting.

That's all for now
Adios,
Eddie Lockhart, MM2-c

The group met at the Green Garden Methodist church Thursday afternoon for their regular meeting at which Marion Barr presided in the absence of Clarabelle Sippel. NORTHERN ILLINOIS—THE LAND OF OPPORTUNITY

How this "hub of transportation" fits into your plans of tomorrow

From north and south, from east and west, America's lines of transportation come together in the central area of Northern Illinois.

Converging here, are twenty-two great trunk-line railroads and seven airlines that reach every part of the United States. A network of highway transportation covers the area, and transport by water is available on Lake Michigan and the Lakes-to-the-Gulf Waterway.

Yes, manufacturers in Northern Illinois are fortunate in having unexcelled transportation. It is faster, costs less because they ship the shortest distance for national distribution. From this area, products can be delivered to nearly one-half the nation's population in forty-eight hours or less.

LITTLE "CITY HICKS"

Tomorrow they will emerge into a world of miracles! Right now they are the children of an America busy at war. Ration stamps, War Bonds, fathers and brothers in the armed forces ... these things, for the moment, are more important than their pleasures and pastimes.

Many of these little "city hicks" have never seen a farm ... never ridden on a load of fresh-mown hay. It's not much fun to travel now. But tomorrow they'll zip down to Uncle Bill's farm ... any time ... in sleek, new, even more comfortably appointed post-war Rock Island ROCKETS!

Today's children will bask in a brighter, more beautiful America ... tomorrow ... when our nation, the war won, resumes its march of progress in the building of the peace.

Dear Mom:
Well mom, here's that long awaited letter for you. I am fine and am on Siapan. It's secured now so I'll have a chance to write more often.

I was completely surrounded at one time and they got to some of our gear. They burned my pack and I had my wallet and everything in it I have nothing but my clothes I have on my carbine and I managed to get one of their pistols. I am going to send the pistol home to dad to keep for me as soon as I have time. Boy, he'll really have something to show the guys at work then.

Well mom I heard from Jimmy yesterday and he's doing swell. Space is getting short so I will close for now and write later.
Love to all, Buddy.

WOMEN'S SERVICE CLUB NEWS

There will be refreshments served and prizes awarded. A $25.00 War Bond and $5.00 Defense Stamp will also be awarded that evening. The money raised will be used to purchase articles for the Christmas boxes for our boys and girls who are serving in the armed forces.

We are very grateful for the following contributions: Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Lowe, $10.00; Miss Ruth Lowe, $2.00; Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Nebeker $2.00; Mrs. E. G. McMahon $1.00; Mrs. Effie Hommerding $5.00; Mrs. John Nielsen $1.00; Miss Grace Nielsen $1.00; A friend of the Service Club $5.00; another friend of the Club $2.00.

Cpl. Louis Dudak of Millbrea, Cal., spent last Saturday and Sunday in the Henry Shevlin home. Cpl. Dudak was a school mate of Miss Virginia Nebeker and when Virginia learned he was being moved to Notre Dame University for training by the Government, she told him to be sure and look up her friends, the Shevlins which he did, and was made most happy by a friendly group of home folks.

When Jack Horras enlisted in the Service from his home in Chicago, his boy friend and close school buddy, enlisted at the same time. That was over 28 months ago. They were fortunately enough to be together all these months, most of that time being spent on Midway Island. Several months ago, they received their first furlough and together, and when Cpl. Horras was home here in Mokena, his mother entertained at dinner for his Buddy, Cpl. Wm. Fennessy of Chicago and his mother, before they again left for further duty. Jack went to an eastern camp and William volunteering for some special work, wherein he was sent to Washington D. C. for training. He completed this special training last Friday and had 72 hours leave, and came home to see his mother in Chicago who had just returned from a hospital. Cpl. Fennessy was very tired as he had to stand all the way from Washington D. C. to Chicago, and that night he used the family car to take home some friends who were visitors in their home, and it is presumed that he fell asleep at the wheel when he crashed into a porch on a house at 60th and Loomis Blvd. in Chicago. He received a broken shoulder, broken ribs, a basil fracture and 8 stitches were taken in his chin. He is in St. George hospital at Auburn Park in Chicago where he still is in an unconscious condition.

The following poem was sent by George Moore to his wife. He has spent several months in Guinea and is still in the South Pacific.

A Hitch in Hell

I'm sitting here thinking of what I left behind,
And I'd hate to put on paper what's running thru my mind.
We've dug so many ditches and cleared so many miles of ground,
A neater place this side of hell just cannot be found.
There is a Certain Consolation tho, so listen while I tell,
When we die we'll go to Heaven cause we've done our Hitch in Hell
We've taken a million Atabine, those little yellow pills,
To elevate your system against the fever and chills.
We've seen a million ack ack burst above us in the sky,
As we run for dingy shelter while the daisy cutters fly.
Put out those lights and cigarettes, we hear the sergeant yell,
This ain't no picnic, its another Hitch in hell.
When the final taps are sounded and we shed our earthly cares
We'll pull out our best parade upon the golden stair.
The Angels will be there to meet us and harps will gladly play,
We'll draw a million in canteen checks and spend them in one day,
Gabriel will blow his horn and St. Peter will proudly yell,
Front Seats for Guys from Guinea,
You've done your Hitch in Hell.

NEVER TOO LATE

The War Labor Board finally corrected a more-than-slight contradiction among members of its staff.

At the very time last April, when one part of the WLB was declaring that Montgomery Ward & Company was a "war" business, another branch of the same agency declared in a little-publicized opinion that Sears, Roebuck & Company was not a "war" business.

To prevent this contradiction from embarrassing the New Deal, the WLB in Washington belatedly has called Sears, Roebuck & Company a "war" industry, too.

A MERE $250,000

Senator Alben W. Barkley says that the "difference between $15,000,000 and $15,250,000 is rather inconsequential" and, of course, Senator McKellar agrees with him. No wonder we can't get the truth about spending in Latin America as long as the New Deal is in power.

STILL "UNCO-ORDINATED"

Although Paul McNutt, head of the War Manpower Commission, has had more than two years in which to solve the manpower problem, it is evident in Washington that he and his thousands of political workers have not even tied in their activities with other bureaus.

When McNutt recently urged businessmen to employ furloughed servicemen for industrial and other work, the businessmen liked the idea. So did the servicemen.

But the General Accounting Office, another government agency, has labeled the practice as "incompatible and objectionable." As a result, Government agencies which claim manpower shortages and would like to hire veterans for short periods of time are stymied in their efforts.

ON CHANGING HORSES.

"There are now 28 Republican wartime Governors. In these states the people did not change horses, they changed vehicles. For times like these and in a stream like this, transportation by horse is not good enough. The American people have common sense. They have been around. When they want to get ashore quickly, trust them to get off the horse and take a speedboat."—Gov. Dwight Griswold.

Peach Ceiling Price

Illinois is not included among the states having a $4.00 peach ceiling. The ceiling in Illinois is $3.66 a bushel or $1.99 a half bushel all season. If the peaches are orchard run, sold loose or ungraded, the ceiling is 6.7 cents a pound. If the grower sells directly to the ultimate consumer, the ceiling is 33 percent higher.

For the United States, the hog corn ratio in June was the same as the long time June average, 10.9. Both the butterfat feed and milk feed ratios were substantially above the long time June average, but the egg feed ratio was down 12 percent. If present trends of livestock feed ratios continue, with milk production especially favored, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics estimates that total milk production for 1944 will be at least as great as, if not greater than, the 118 billions pounds produced in 1943.

There were more goods in cold storage on July 1 than at any other time in our history. All items with the exception of creamery butter were greatly in excess of those of July 1, 1943 and the 1939-43 average.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics reports that the number of chicks produced by commercial hatcheries during June was the lightest since June 1939. Hatchings of turkeys during the first five months of this year were 26 percent above the number for the same period last year. The War Food Administration has issued an order, which became effective July 17 and which applies to Illinois, requiring the set aside of 100 percent of the turkeys produced and marketed until the quantity needed by the government is obtained.

Sales of canned fruits and vegetables by home "packers and processors," if total output in a calendar year does not exceed a specified amount, ranging from 500 to 1500 quarts, are exempt from price control.

Sumner Slitchter, Professor of Economics at Harvard University, expects people to use their unprecedented volume of liquid assets to satisfy the unprecedented volume of accumulated needs for consumer goods.

Under these circumstances a rather rapid disappearance of consumer goods is expected to take place when this flood of purchasing power can be used. Professor Slitchter thinks that the demand for goods by individuals and business enterprises will keep 57 million persons employed without overtime. This is 25 percent higher than before the war and about the equivalent of that now prevailing, if those in the armed forces are excluded. This would produce about 155 billion dollars worth of goods a year. He mentioned shortages in particular items as follows: Vacuum cleaners, 3.5 million; radio receivers, 20 million; electrical refrigerators, 5 million, electric irons 10 million; washing machines, 3 million, and a deficiency in construction of residences since Pearl Harbor of 750 family units.

Let Us Keep The Best

It is but natural that American doctors should oppose Federal socialization of medicine. They have seen such systems curb incentive and progress in the medical field in other nations, and remove the personal relationship between doctor and patient, leaving in its stead an official system as impersonal as medical examinations at Army induction centers. If that's what this nation wants, socialized medicine will fill the bill. But the people should remember that it is not the doctors, but Mr. and Mrs. John Jones who will be the losers.

Let us retain the great advantages of private medicine but add to them the benefits that will accrue from the co-operation of government and industry in eliminating the causes of illness, as well as providing easy and economical methods of paying for it.

GAS tronomy CARE FOR YOUR REFRIGERATOR

Do you treat your refrigerator as a catch-all for leftovers and pleasantly forget about them?
Or, do you give the refrigerator the place of respect it truly deserves as food insurance?

The Liquefied Petroleum Gas Association gives a dozen simple rules on the care and use of refrigerators. The association represents the industry which produces propane and butane gas and delivers them in bottled or tank form to homes away from city gas mains, for use as fuel in gas refrigeration, gas ranges and gas water-heaters.

1. Remove paper wrappings from foods before storing in refrigerator.
2. Wipe off milk and cream bottles.
3. Wash and clean vegetables and fruit before storing. Wash berries just before serving.
4. Place uncooked meat (unwrapped) under freezing unit.
5. Allow foods to cool before storing and make sure they are covered.
6. Watch leftovers and use them attractively.
7. Place foods to allow for free circulation of air throughout refrigerator.
8. Keep bottles and cans at room temperature until ready for chilling and serving.
9. Open and close doors as quickly as possible to preserve cold.
10. Clean refrigerator by wiping with a damp cloth often. Wash with a weak solution of baking soda.
11. Use ice trays for frozen salads, ice creams, mousses, and for colored and flavored ice cubes.
12. Defrost regularly according to manufacturer's instructions.

WE LOOK ALL-WAYS BEFORE CROSSING

"We look all-ways before crossing" is the subject of the February poster in the series "We Work for Victory, too," being distributed to more than 38,000 classrooms in the Illinois and Indiana territory of the Chicago Motor Club.

More than a million school children in this territory are urged to observe all traffic rules in an effort to reduce accidents which not only are unnecessary and tragic but which divert time of doctors and nurses, and hospital space needed for the war emergency.

Instruction sheets accompanying the poster help teachers use the safety lessons to best advantage for various groups, such as pupils of different ages and grades and in rural and municipal areas.

Spotlight by GRANTLAND RICE

AS IS usual, in an army camp, an argument over sports was under way. This one on baseball came in the wake of the recent all-star game in Pittsburgh.

The general idea was this—if you picked two all-star teams from both leagues, dating back to 1900, and they played a series of seven games, which league would win?

Naturally the first move in such a situation is the selection of the two teams. Which incidentally, will only drag in another argument. I'm sticking my neck out, but here we go—

Grantland Rice

NAT'L LEAGUE		AMER. LEAGUE
Catchers		Dickey, Cochrane
Pitchers		Alexander, Matty, Johnson, Grove, Hubbell, Dean, Walsh, Waddell
First Base		Terry, Chance
Second Base		Frisch, Hornsby
Third Base		Traynor, Jimmy Collins
Shortstop		Wagner
Outfield		F. Clarke, Moore, Cobb, Speaker, Ott, Sheekard, Ruth

Cy Young isn't included in the list of pitchers since the Gilmore, Ohio, phenom pitched for both leagues. His winning record of 511 games leaves the others far behind.

Having taken the first hurdle in naming the two teams the next barrier is picking the winner.

You would find on both sides, brilliant pitching skill thrown against terrific hitting. When this combination collides, the star pitcher usually has the call. Only great pitching could suppress these hitters, but the great pitching is there.

Rating the Two Squads

1. The catchers—Here the American league has at least a shade. As good as Bresnahan and Hartnett were, Dickey and Cochrane are at least close to being the two all-time tops, especially on the power side.

2. The pitching—Anyone who can say that either league has the winning margin here is a better guesser than I am, taking all eight in their best years. Walter Johnson would be the hardest to beat, but the two sets average arm and arm. We'll give the pitching a draw.

3. The infields—With Sisler and Gehrig the American league has a decided advantage around first base. Bill Terry was about the best all-around first baseman the National league had to show, but there may be a stronger choice in Frank Chance. The consistent batting power of Sisler and Gehrig is well above the N. L. pair.

I'd say the A. L. also has the edge at second base with Eddie Collins and Nap Lajoie on the job. These two were among the harder and better hitters, although neither out-ranked Hornsby in this respect. They were also among the greatest defensive infielders in baseball history.

The Summing Up

The A. L. takes a healthy lead in the outfield. Cobb, Speaker and Ruth form an incomparable trio. Just back of these would come Jackson, DiMaggio and Ted Williams.

Fred Clarke of Pittsburgh, Terry Moore of St. Louis, Mel Ott of the Giants, Jimmy Sheekard of Chicago's Cubs (also Brooklyn) might form a stronger defensive combination. I think they would. But they would be outclassed on the attacking side in the run-making department.

For that matter Cobb, Speaker and Ruth were never listed with the lame and blind defensively. They could also roam quite a bit.

To help out the army-camp argument, it would be my guess that the American league outfield would supply the winning balance on the side of power. They wouldn't be murdering such pitchers as Hubbell, Alexander, Matty and Dean but when you add up the combined assaulting ingredients the A. L. can offer, you get a trifle too much for the N. L. to match.

The National league's best chance would be in the box with four of the smartest pitchers and four of the greatest competitors that ever baffled a batting eye.

In this ledger the A. L. wins in a driving finish.

College Football Outlook

One odd fact is that 1944 will have many more colleges playing football than 1943 could show. Army colleges will still be up against the same handicap that wrecked so many teams last fall.

From present indications, after the start of midsummer practice, a far greater number of squads will be more evenly matched than they were a year ago where too many teams were badly outclassed. Few experienced players are left now.

Speaking Sports by Bob McShane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

IT REMAINED for Arne Andersson, Swedish schoolteacher, to prove to the world that talk of a four-minute mile was more than wishful thinking.

In the greatest mile race of all time, Andersson toured the distance in 4:01.6. Running against the famed Gunder Hagg, Andersson came the closest to achieving the goal of some 70 years. He has definitely proved his superiority over Hagg, and has removed any doubt that there is anyone in his class. And it should be noted that Hagg knocked off the mile in 4:02, better than any previously recorded time before their duel.

1943 Record

Andersson's 4:01.6 mile was the latest development in the running of the event that has become a monopoly for him and Hagg.

They have broken the record four times in the past two years, shaving nearly five seconds from the 4:06.4 chalked up by Sidney Wooderson of England in 1937.

In 1943 Andersson established a world record of 4:02.6. At 28, the flying Swede cut a full second from that mark. For the first three quarters of his race with Hagg, Arne actually was eight-tenths of a second ahead of the four-minute pace. He ran the first quarter in 56.8 for the fastest lap ever made in a mile race. When he reached the half-mile mark, with 80.5 for the quarter, he was hitting pretty much the pace of a good middle-distance man. He made the third quarter in 62.9 and the last in 61.4.

In running 4:02.6 last year Andersson ran his quarters in 58.5, 62.5, 61.8 and 59.8. Comparison of the two races shows that he was 1.7 faster on the first quarter than last summer and two full seconds on the second lap. This gave him a total advantage of 3.9 seconds for the half. He began to lag and ran the third quarter 1.9 slower and then lost 2.4 in the final. It is obvious that he has improved over the first half mile. But he will have to develop a stronger finish to clock the four-minute mile.

Francis Powers, Chicago sports writer, points out that Col. Arnold Storde Jackson, English Olympic champion in 1912, calculated that the four-minute mile will be reached only if a runner can pace himself to 58, 62, 61 and 59 seconds. That is a punishing schedule. It demands a terrific start, a breathing spell during the second quarter with a gradual pickup during the third and speed enough for a slamming finish.

A Comparison

Andersson bettered Jackson's standard for the first quarter and was 2.7 ahead of time at the half. He fell 1.1 back of schedule on the third, but was still eight-tenths of a second to the good for the three-quarters. The final lap was his undoing—he went 2.4 off the Jackson pace.

Andersson indicated earlier in the season that he would have come to the United States but for previous running commitments in Sweden. Hagg, too, has announced that he will return to the United States at "the earliest possible convenience."

Their appearance here would furnish grand entertainment, but the competition we could provide during the summer would make an early trip to this country rather futile.

It would be better if the two Swedes would come for our winter season. They could meet America's milers when they were in top form. It is also doubtful if Andersson and Hagg, during the warm months, could approach the time they made in their homeland, where they can run late in the evening when it is cool and there is no bothersome humidity.

Anecdota Presidential:

Although the White House is the last place in the world (except Grant's Tomb) you'd expect to find a gag-man, some of our Presidents have fashioned bon mots that would have earned them berths on leading radio comedians' payrolls.

Calvin Coolidge, generally accepted as the tightest-lipped of the Chief Executives, has several nifties to his credit. A Washington correspondent questioned him about his reaction to Rupert Hughes' biography debunking many of the legends about George Washington. Coolidge gazed out the window and then muttered nasally: "I notice the Washington Monument is still standing."

In a discussion on the proper use of a word, Grover Cleveland was surprised to hear a Senator refer to his source as "Daniel Webster's dictionary." "But my dear Senator," said Cleveland, "Noah made the dictionary." "Don't be silly," replied the Senator, giving him a scornful look. "Noah built the ark."

'IT CAN'T BE DONE'

When Wilson was faced with severe opposition on his League of Nations proposals, the objection, "It can't be done," was familiar to his ears. At such times he would relate this story: A man was telling his son a bedtime story about an alligator. It was creeping up behind a turtle, with its mouth wide open. Finally it was within reach but just as its great jaws were snapping shut, the turtle made a spring, ran up a tree and escaped. "Why, dad," said the boy, "how can a turtle spring and climb a tree?" "Great Scott," replied the father, "he had to!"

A Congressional committee was meeting with President Wilson, and, as you can well imagine, many of the good Representatives were shaking the walls with their loud, but un-rational oratory. The Prez listened patiently for a while, and then related this story: "I am reminded of the old Colored man down in Virginia who was riding a mule, and who was caught in a violent thunderstorm while passing through a dense forest. Although he trembled at the horrifying peals of thunder, he was thankful for the occasional flashes of lightning which enabled him to see his way. At last he prayed: 'O Lawd, if it's jes' the same to you, I'd rather hev a little less noise an' a little more light!'"

Theodore Roosevelt had this legend on his White House desk: "The value of a smile—costs nothing—but creates much. It is rest to the weary—daylight to the discouraged—sunshine to the sad—and nature's best antidote for trouble! Yes—it cannot be bought, begged, borrowed or stolen—for it is something that is no earthly good to anybody—until it is given away."

A large Republican meeting was attended by a small boy offering for sale four puppies, so young their eyes were still unopened. "Get your McKinley pups!" he shouted, and enjoyed a brisk sale. Two weeks later, the Democrats had a meeting in the same town, and the little boy was again seen hawking an armful of pups. "Get your Bryan pups!" he yelled this time.

"See here," said an onlooker, "didn't I see you selling 'McKinley pups' here a few weeks ago?" "Yessir," replied the lad meekly, "but these are different—they've got their eyes open!"

Of course we can't prove it, but George Washington is alleged to have become wearied with an official investigation which paraded a score of experts through his chambers. "It is my opinion," he is quoted, "that calling many witnesses to prove one fact is like adding a large quantity of water to a small quantity of brandy—it makes it weak."

At Teheran, Stalin drove home a point with a yarn that FDR is said to be chuckling over still. "The neighbor of an Arab sheik," related the Premier, "asked for the loan of a rope. 'I cannot lend it,' said the sheik, 'I need it to tie up my milk with.' . . . 'But surely,' replied the other, 'you do not tie up your milk with a rope?'"

"Brother," said the sheik, "when you do not want to do a thing, one reason is as good as another."

FDRoosevelt, commenting on the promise of aid recently sworn by a small pro-Allied nation, told a newspaper man that it reminded him of the story of the Barbados Island and the last war. The Barbados, with a standing army of twelve men, was taking bows because it had "stood ready." It was later learned that the island had indeed "stood ready." In the early days of the war, it was disclosed, a cablegram was dispatched to military leaders of the Allied command. "Success," it read. "Barbados is behind you!"

Hog Cholera Can Be Properly Treated

Vaccination and Care Essential

Hog cholera is a serious contagious swine disease caused by a virus, which is a substance so small that it cannot be seen through a microscope. It costs a loss of $12,500,000 annually to swine growers, according to a report issued by Clemson Agricultural college.

The symptoms of hog cholera are loss of appetite, high fever, and either constipation or diarrhea. The affected animals usually remain in the bed, but when forced to move, walk with a wobbling gait. The sick pigs usually die within six to ten days but may linger three to four weeks before they die.

The virus which causes hog cholera is present in the body tissues, fluids and excretions of hogs affected with hog cholera. Therefore, feed, water, bedding, and soil become contaminated very quickly with bladder and bowel eliminations.

If this infected material gets into the digestive tract of susceptible swine, these animals will develop hog cholera in a few days.

Hog cholera is usually spread by moving sick hogs, by moving unvaccinated hogs in contaminated trucks, Saugus, Calif., "blue blood," tested and ready to be shipped east to aid in strain improvement. Barbara Williams, 3½, whose father raised the boar, gives it a farewell feeding.

by dogs, buzzards and other animals, by mud and manure carried from infected to noninfected farms on the shoes of individuals, on wheels of farm vehicles, by careless handling of hog cholera virus, by feeding table scraps and garbage which contain hog bones and uncooked pork trimmings and by improper disposal of the carcasses of hogs which have died of hog cholera.

Hog cholera can be prevented by vaccinating healthy animals with adequate amounts of hog cholera serum and virus produced by a reputable laboratory. They should be vaccinated when six to seven weeks old.

Corn Cobs Come

Into Their Own

In competition with wood flour as a plastic material, corn cobs should bring the farmers about $20 a ton. While transportation will be the deciding factor, it is planned to establish small mills throughout the country to manufacture the plastic.

While commercial organizations have become interested in research work with corn cob plastics the lead was taken by Dr. O. R. Sweeney of Iowa State college. This work was with waste corn stalks, corn cobs and other waste cellulose in the forms available on every farm.

Estimates indicate a market for a billion tons of plastic material annually when the work is fully developed and machinery made available. A new drying and grinding plant has been perfected. It takes a supply of four to five thousand tons of corn cobs in a radius of six to eight miles to make an investment in a community drier and grinder practical.

Milkweed in Demand

The extraction of edible oil, chemically similar to soybean oil, is the only one of the new uses to which this weed has been put as a war measure.

In Canada, the milkweed has proven a good source of rubber. The leaves from one acre will yield from 200 to 300 pounds of rubber gum.

The floss of milkweed can be converted into a substitute for kapok which is in much demand for life preservers and linings for flying suits. This floss should be picked in early September after the seeds turn brown and before the pods open up.

Plans for Wintering

Satisfactory wintering of beef cows on forest ranges of the southeast is possible if they are given a daily supplemental feed of two pounds of soybean or cottonseed meal per head. This type of feed has been found to stimulate appetite and make for better use of native forage. Although meal feeds are on the scarce list, it is pointed out that the supply required is small in proportion to the quantity of beef produced.

When King Died in India, Elephant Chose New Ruler

The importance of elephants in Indian history dates from the Vedic period, when they were India's king-makers. They were supposed to be gifted with an unerring instinct to spot the real scion of the royal blood. Whenever a king died childless, the royal elephant was called upon to solve the difficulty.

He was gaily caparisoned and given a garland to put around the neck of whomsoever he chose in his rambles for the quest of a successor. Wandering through the hills and dales, the elephant would come upon the rightful ruler of his choice, and put the garland around his neck. Thus, sometimes a beggar's bowl was exchanged for a kingly crown.

In this way was the new king found, and the courtiers who followed the royal animal flocked to his standard and swore fealty to him.

FROM coast to coast women are wearing these strapped, sun-backs! It's the new look in fashions—and it's practical, cool and very, very pretty. Have at least one real barebacker with matching jacket.

Foster D. Snell, Inc., well-known consulting chemists, have just completed a test with a group of men and women suffering from Athlete's Foot. These people were told to use Soretone. At the end of only a ten-day test period, their feet were examined by a physician. We quote from the report:

"After the use of Soretone according to the directions on the label for a period of only ten days, 80.6% of the cases showed clinical improvement of an infection which is most stubborn to control."

Improvements were shown in the symptoms of Athlete's Foot—the itching, burning, redness, etc. The report says:

"In our opinion Soretone is of very definite benefit in the treatment of this disease, which is commonly known as 'Athlete's Foot.'"

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

The reason for the great demand for tires and other rubber products for military motor equipment is evident when it is realized that today's infantry divisions require 3,500 ordnance vehicles of 160 different varieties. The same size outfit in World War I was equipped with 4,400 horses and 153 ordnance motor vehicles.

Because of the poor condition of tires and other parts, 43 per cent more cars had breakdowns and had to be towed from the tunnels beneath New York's Hudson River in 1943 than in any peacetime year, although traffic was 28 per cent lower than in 1941.
